- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 485/Sociology 463. Mass Media and Public Opinion. Derives formation and change in mass opinion as a result of mass media structure and content. Theories of public opinion, including classical stimulus-response, personal influence, socialization/predispositional models, uses and gratifications, third person, spiral of silence, Response/Acceptance/Sampling theory, and others are surveyed. Students are expected to learn to be critical of the ways in which public opinion is measured, analyzed, and disseminated. Typical enrollment: 25.

- University of Michigan. Communication 781. Measurement in Communication Research. Graduate course on conceptualization and measurement of constructs frequently used by communications researchers. Includes survey measurement, conceptualization, reliability/validity, content analysis, unidimensional and multidimensional scaling, factor analysis, magnitude scaling, ANOVA and regression analysis. Typical enrollment: 10.

- University of Michigan. Communication 771. Mass Media and the Public. Graduate course on the relationship between media and the public, focusing on public opinion formation and change. Emphasis placed on political processes and effects, including political advertising and news coverage of campaigns. Typical enrollment: 10.

- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 484/Political Science 325/Political Science 329. Mass Media and Political Behavior. Maps the relationship between news media and government historically and in the modern era. Specific emphasis on the changing nature of campaign coverage occasioned by the partisan reforms and political upheavals of the late 1960's and early 1970's. Typical enrollment: 75.

- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 469. Mass Media and Political Socialization. Discusses social scientific and qualitative/theoretical approaches to issues of political socialization processes, agents, and effects focusing particularly on mass media. Typical enrollment: 25.

- University of Michigan. Sociology 501, 512, 513. Sequence in Survey Methodology. Three-course sequence associated with the execution of the Detroit Area Study. In the first semester, students are given a substantive overview of the research goals for the current study, and begin to design the survey instrument. In the second semester, students are given instruction on survey techniques, including sampling, question wording, split-sampling, and data management. The third semester is dedicated to analyzing the survey results and writing up research findings. Typical enrollment: 15.

- University of Michigan. Communication Studies 474. Mass Communication and Identity. Focuses on the media's role in the socialization process and impact of group attitudes on public opinion and political behavior. Theories including social identity, reference group, symbolic racism, group conflict, social dominance, principled conservatism, and others are reviewed. The role of the media in each of these theories of groups is discussed. Students perform quantitative secondary analyses on a dataset of their choice to test some of the hypotheses discussed in class. Typical enrollment: 25.

- University of Michigan. Political Science/Communication Studies 620. Politics and the Mass Media. Explores theories of news making, elite communication strategies, and attitudinal and behavioral effects of exposure to political communication. The impact of media on governance and representation is discussed. Emphasizes the American case, but several discussions incorporate comparative electoral settings. Typical enrollment: 10.
