CURRICULUM GUIDE

Sociology is a broad discipline that covers several areas of inquiry and many topics. Some students prefer to stay on a broad course of study, enrolling in classes across the department's curriculum. Others discover a more narrow interest or passion within the discipline and want to focus their coursework on that area. Students who wish to carve a focus into their program of study can use this guide choose electives which might be of interest based on the intended focus.

This is a list of the Department of Sociology's undergraduate course offerings arranged around broader interest areas within and related to the discipline. This may not be a comprehensive list, as there are cross-listed and/or meet-together courses housed in other LSA departments.

Please Note: _This guide is not a list of major sub-plans or minors and it only includes courses that have been offered in the last three academic years. Newly created courses may not be listed. Topics courses (SOC 102, 105, 295, 495) are not listed but may fall into one or more of these categories based on the topic offered._
